5. [redacted] a party of 21 men, including CH'EN Ting (7115/7844),<sup>4</sup> commander of the Chinese Communist 3 Military Sub-District of eastern Fukien; JUAN Chih-ping (7086/1807/3521),<sup>5</sup> commander of the 37 Regiment, 13 Public Security Division; CH'AI Tsung-chi (2693/1350/4949), chief of staff, 1 Coast Guard Column (sic); and K'ANG Jun-mao (1660/3387/2021), commissioner (sic), participated in a ceremony initiating a construction program in Fukien. To be constructed were a radar station, an electric power plant, and a military barracks at Mat'oupi (7456/7333/7865),<sup>6</sup> and at Lohu (5012/3275), Hsiap'u (N 26-53, E 119-39) Hsien.
6. The radar station was to be constructed at Shuiwu (3055/3087) Power Plant, Houshan (1775/1472) Mat'oupi. The barracks were scheduled for construction at Changwanli (7022/3494/9190), Mat'oupi. The Chinese 37 Public Security Regiment was to be responsible for the construction program and would be assisted by civil laborers.
7. [redacted] the Communists in Ch'anghsin (N 31-01, E 119-56) had concluded the recruitment and physical examination of 1,000 men for the Chinese Communist Army. Two hundred and twenty-nine were rejected either for medical reasons or were deferred because their services to industry were considered more essential. Following a farewell party sponsored by the Ch'anghsin government, the recruits were concentrated in Hangchow. A receiving center<sup>7</sup> had been established by the Chekiang Military District for recruits from various cities.<sup>8</sup>
